HARDY FRUIT for Fall Planting

If you live south of Central Iowa or Central Nebraska, plant fruit trees the usual way. North of that line, it may be better to bury the trees in a small trench, tops and all. They store perfectly. Next spring, when the frost is out of the ground, dig them up and plant them. You get them planted at the earliest spring date, and early planting really pays, especially for northern planters. If you wait until spring to order, you may be late ordering or we may not be able to ship at your earliest planting date. So order this fall.

HARDY PLUMS

Gurney's have been famous for years for hardy, northern-grown plums. Budded on plum understock, not peach. This makes them very hardy.

Nursery Stock for more SOUTHERN PLANTING

We think most of this material can be safely fall planted from Missouri south. If in doubt, consult your local Experiment Station. Or write to us. All shipped at proper fall planting time, or you specify shipping date.

ROSES

Experts Plant in Fall

From Missouri south, everyone should plant roses in the fall. In Oklahoma-Texas region and eastward they always do better fall-planted because the roots get established and plants get more early spring moisture. But even north of Iowa, many experts bury rose plants in the fall, 10 to 12 in. deep, then mound over with dirt. With the earliest spring growing weather, they dig them up and plant them.

Hybrid Tea Roses

STRAWBERRIES

You Should Have a Patch

Where fall planting of strawberries is practical, it is better than spring planting because the plants make root growth in the winter and get a quick, healthy growth in the spring before hot weather hits. They can be planted safely as far north as the middle of Iowa. But mulch after ground freezes so frost won't heave them out of ground.

BN702—BLAKEMORE. Will stand more hot weather. A heavy June bearer, with large, well-colored fruit that holds its shape even when canned and preserved. Ideal for southern gardens. 50 for $1.10; 100 for $2.09; 200 for $3.89; 500 for $8.69, postpaid.
